Reflection

This is especially evident in the Gospel. Jesus' encounter with Peter occurs in the context of the morning after a night of failed fishing. Overcoming their own reluctance, Simon Peter and his companions, obedient to the word of Christ, cast out their nets once again. Now overwhelmed by the miraculous catch, Peter expresses his awareness of Christ's greatness and his own inadequacy: "Depart from me Lord, for I am a sinful man." Jesus' response should fill us with hope as much as it did Simon Peter: "Do not be afraid; from now on you will be catching men." The Lord's greatness is seen in his desire to work through weak human instruments. This is truly the Catholic outlook that focuses not so much on the man, be he a pope, bishop or priest, but on Christ, who works through him. What is true for those who exercise sacramental ministry in the Church also holds true for all the baptized. If we are docile to the command of Christ and cast out our nets with a spirit of absolute confidence, the Lord will make fruitful our efforts, especially when we cast them out for the most important reason: the salvation of souls. With the help of Christ, we can all be "fishers of men." From Sacerdos.org
